Endless debate

Dutch doctoral education-loose structure

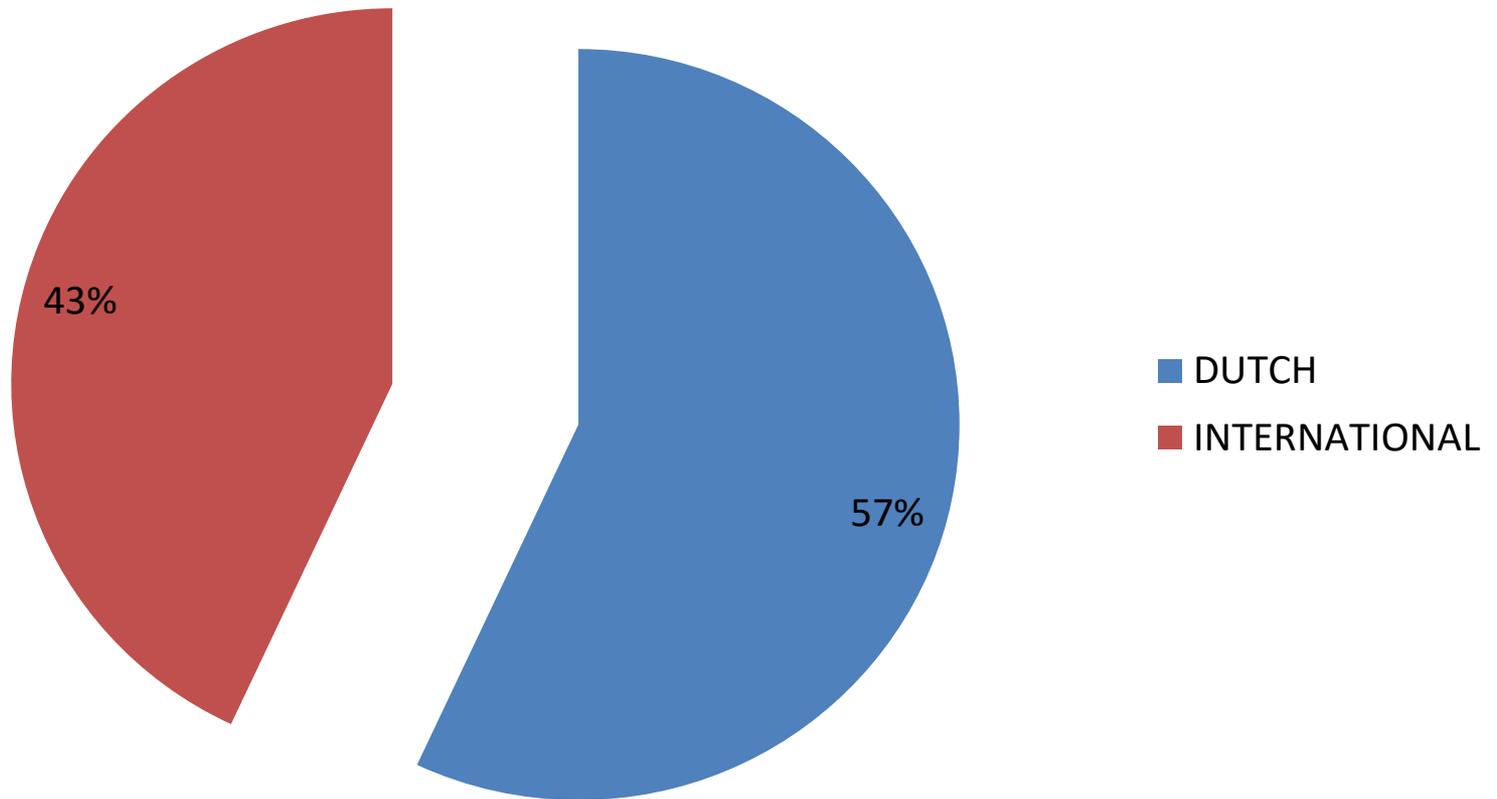

- Employed PhDs (beginning of a research career)
- Mainly Dutch nationality
- Loosely structured trajectories
- No registration tracking, no formalization of admission process
- No tuition fees
- No training or coursework
- Research core activity and sporadic teaching
- Supervisor is the main person in the doctoral trajectory

"The structure provided by the University and my supervisors are amazing, but what I love the most about Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam is its international environment. Here we can share experiences and perspectives with people from all over the world, which enriches us as researchers and contributes to our scientific work. Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam is a living proof that diversity inspires us and brings out the best in us, as people and as scientists."

JULIANA SENNA
Ph.D. Candidate at the Department of Political Science and Public Administration of the Faculty of Social Sciences

"During my childhood, I always dreamt of coming to Europe as I am from Serampore in the state of West Bengal in India, which was a former Danish colony. I am currently doing my Ph.D in Human Movement Sciences at the Faculty of Behavioural and Movement Sciences at Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam and also a mobility period at the KU Leuven, Belgium. I am an Erasmus Mundus Joint Doctorate fellow. I really like the interdisciplinary research environment provided at Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam. We have some great research facilities in our department. I have wonderful colleagues whom I enjoy working with and I think I have the best supervisors as they always strive for excellence and making sure I become an independent researcher."
